FAMILY HERALD PAPER for DECEMBER.
The Daily Mail writes as follows—
"Among the English periodicals received in Australia this month, the best is undoubtedly the 'Family Herald,' as it is accorded to any other publication of its kind in the world. . . . Its reputation has been ably preserved, and the character of the best English light literature is safe, and amusing reading has been nobly sustained." The PARLIAMENT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 15.

The SPEAKER took the chair at half-past 4 o'clock.

PAPERS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND laid on the table of the House the report of Messrs. Mysterley and Gordon on the condition of the Prospect dam.

Mr. BOWEN laid on the table the report of the Select Committee on the Silkstone Coal Mine Railway Bill.

It was ordered that the papers be printed.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

Sir HENRY PARKES said he had received a letter from his Excellency the Governor that morning, which he would read. It was as follows:—

"Government House,
"Sydney, New South Wales,
"January 14, 1880.

"My Dear Sir Henry—My Duty has required in the formation of a new Ministry, which, he informs me, consists of the following gentlemen:—

Premier and Colonial Secretary— Mr. G. R. DIXIE Vice-President of the Executive Council— Hon. JOHN LACKY, M.L.C. Attorney-General— Hon. EDMUND BARTLEY, M.L.C. Colonial Treasurer— Mr. J. P. FLETCHER Minister for Works and Railways— Mr. J. A. GILCHRIST Minister for Land— Mr. T. M. SUTTER Minister for Justice— Mr. HENRY CLARKE Postmaster-General— Mr. F. M. CHAMBER Minister for Pines— Mr. F. M. CHAMBER Minister for Public Instruction— Mr. F. B. SUTTON	The new Ministry are prepared to be sworn in as soon as the House has voted the necessary supplies. "Your assistance," "CARRINGTON,"

Continuing, SIR HENRY said that the outgoing Ministry had undertaken to ask the House to grant the necessary supply. (Hear, hear.) The Secretary of the Colony would, however, be unable to take the necessary steps to obtain supply, if they purposed asking Parliament to grant supply for the months of January and February, as the Government would not be in existence at that time.

such provision would be sufficient for the purposes of the present occasion. The outgoing Minister intended to take that step, and also, at the desire of the hon. Member for the City of London, to amend the Bill in the Supply Bill a provision for giving £100,000 for the Treasurer's advance fund. The retiring Ministry also intended to do all they could to give the occasion of the new Ministry's business. (Hear, hear.)

THE ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENRY PARKES said that as there were now no Ministers, no questions could be answered, and he should suggest that the House postpone the ordinary business on the paper until the Supply Bill arrived. If the House moved that all the other business be postponed.

Mr. FRANK SUTHER said he would like to draw attention to the political side, which they and the Government had neglected. The Bill was a most unprecedented step in the political history of the country. He complained of the coldest display of sending for Ministers, and he thought that the action to be one of the biggest blunders committed during the whole history of colonial political life. Surely none could forget what happened in 1897, when the Government were returned to Parliament with a two-thirds majority. Since that expression of the people of the colony the personnel of the House had in no way changed from what it was two years ago. Then the free-trade party of New South Wales had been placed in the humiliating position of seeing a minority, headed by Mr. Dibbs, the Premier, and Mr. Hume, the Minister of Education, the exalted personage at the head of the Executive should not have forgotten the fact that the constitution of the House had in no way changed from what it was two years ago. Then the free-trade party took the lead in the party lines, a large majority declaring in favour of free trade. Surely that gentleman, who was paid such a high salary for the use of his tongue, should have borne in mind the fact to which he had just referred.

Mr. BUCHANAN rose to a point of order, asserting that no member had a right to speak in such terms of the Government as the Government was composed of by the hon. member opposite.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that neither the Governor's name, or SPEAKER, should be introduced at such a time. The hon. member was to be understood as referring to the matter on a motion for the postponement of business. There would be a more regular opportunity to discuss the question, and he ruled that it could not be dealt with at present.

Mr. SMITH, while being far from desirous of disobeying the rules of the House, stated that his object was to ascertain whether the same members opposite to the Government were not also opposed to the way proposed with the business of the country. If he could secure them, as a representative of the people, to support the Government, he would be enabled to prevent one shilling being voted, or one act of administration performed, until an appeal had been made to the co-constituents.

Mr. BURNES said the hon. member would have a more fitting opportunity to bring the subject before the House when supply was asked for. That would be the legitimate time and place for the discussion, which he would then submit on a motion for the postponement of the business.

The motion was then agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

A message was received from his Excellency the Governor, recommending that the necessary provision be made for the payment of the Temporary Supply Bill for January and February.

Mr. BURNES moved the suspension of the Standing Orders that the bill might be taken through all its stages in one sitting.

Object was taken to the motion, and Mr. BURNES then gave notice to bring forward his motion on the 10th inst.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY PARKES moved that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. F. SMITH said he took that opportunity of saying that he intended to have said it at an earlier period of the sitting. The constitution of the Assembly as elected two years ago remained unchanged when the three thousand two-hundred and thirty-five to one hundred of protectionists, independents, or, as the hon. member for Queenstown described them, bognus members. It was surprising to him that his Excellency did not see the necessity of a more complete re-organisation of the business of the country, and that he did not send for some gentlemen of the free-trade party to form a committee to report on the subject. The Government could form two or three Ministries (—Opposition ebers—) from that side of the House. He ventured to say that a similar number could be formed from the other side. He was not a Minister. (Mr. O'MARA: Not capable Minister.) (Laughter.) That hon. gentleman seemed enamoured of his leader, who entered the chamber to the accompaniment of a band of music. The protectionist party merely for the sake of office. The people had cast that gentleman out as unfitted to be a leader.

of the bus, member for Gundersdal the other evening he wished to say that he acted independently of party lines, feeling that besides the isolation of the party in the north, the party was the part of the people to see good and proper administration. (Hear, hear.)

He was not further in the instance in which he voted against the Government, and he was not in any way connected with the party.

He further inquired into Mr. Wain's charges, which proved as clearly as day the fact of maladministration, and which was enough to prove any man's honesty.

His members notice what the charge against Mr. Pehon was, and he might tell the House that a number of the Ministry were in the House at the time this was said.

There was no evidence in question was that Mr. Wain and Mr. Lyne went to Mr. P. J. M'Mahon's store, and learned distinctly that Mr. M'Mahon was not a member of the Ministry. M'Mahon's who was then in Mr. Wright's employ as managing director. (Mr. M'Mahon: You are wrong; Mr. M'Mahon was not in the Ministry.)

He was not in the Ministry, the Colonial Secretary he virtually answered in the affirmative, and under the circumstances it was not to be wondered at that, him.

He could not suppose how his gentlemen on the other side were disposed to consider the new Ministerial appointments as being satisfactory, and the business without immediate dissolution. An hon. member: That will come. No doubt it would come, and he had this much to say, that, being called in, he had no objection to the Government being put in a position of administration, or in the grant of any money for the use of the new Government. He was satisfied that his countrymen were not going to be deceived by the Government in conducting the business of the country. He would not support a man who had been a renegade to his principles simply for the sake of office. [An hon. member: That is an assumption, and I have no conclusions from the facts before the House. If the leader were to be a protectionist then let them have a consistent one, until there had been an opportunity of showing that they were not going to effect any change of administration. (Applause cheers.) It was all very well to say the supplies should be granted, but they were to assume that the Government would be the Government of the country, and that the Government business until the elections were over. (An Hon. Member: They want 60 per cent.) The question arose whether it would be better to refuse supplies, and go to the aid of the Government, or to support them.

Mr. WISE wished to explain why he took the somewhat unusual course—(hear, hear)—of objecting to of fearless men, a manly majority, possessing intelligence, national patriotism and courage, who stand or fall in guarding the true interests of the country.

FORMLY thought the gentlemen who had the office should get supplies to enable them to go to country. Whenever they made their appeal, he heard the composition of the incoming Ministry was not the best. He thought the Government had adopted by many members that night. He expressed his opinion, for the best interests of the country. He thought the Government had not been successful, and the time was ripe for a general appeal.

SEAFER did not regard the new Ministry as a national one. He had nothing to say against the members of the Ministry, most of whom were sensible and honest. He thought the Government was weak unless they were placed in power by the vote of the country. He was in favour of protracting the Government as long as possible. It would be a great deal better to have a Government of men who were not so much inclined to vote supply to the Government. The only member of the Ministry unfitted for his position was the member for the county of Devon. He thought the people of the country had much faith in that gentleman, whose past political career as a party

He was utterly incapable of leading any party, either in power or opposition. The freetrade party in opposition had been deserted by their own members, and Sir Henry Parkes, on their other side of the House could not even count on Sir Henry Parkes had deserted them in their stead. Sir Henry Parkes, on the other side of the House as a pledged freetrader, had been dragged to his journey's end. It was the duty of the two-thirds majority to support the freetrade party, and Sir Henry Parkes never vote for or sanction a step to a new Ministry. No Ministry, except a Ministry made up of the freetrade party, could lead the country. Mr. Dibbs was the only man who was ready to vote to freetrade, and the wonder was that the freetrade party accepted him as their leader. He was a man who was ready to vote to freetrade, and his tactics he veered round to protection. Why an hon. member had been sent for to form a Ministry was more than he could understand.

M'ELRONE said that the threat of the hon. member was done in the House, but he would not hurt the freetrade party. The freetrade party were carried into effect and supply was maintained, and the freetrade party were the hands of working men in the Civil service, and not

Mining Ministry. The hon. member who had assumed the seat went out of his way to compare the Government with the Opposition. He would tell them that the members of the new Government had just as much ability and social position as the members of the old Government. In fact, we were equally qualified to run the Government. Taking the Government individually, and, excepting Mr. Bruner, the Government were men of superior character. The hon. member for the West of Scotland, who, in his answer for Gungahsal alluded to the Fehon case, said he would tell the House that he had been present when the House voted against the Government. He said that the Government were made against Mr. Fehon, but simply on account of the insolent treatment hon. members rendered to him. He said that he was not sure he did not believe that Mr. Fehon was guilty of corruption; on the contrary, he firmly believed that he was an honest and capable man, and would have been a great asset to the Government. He charged against Mr. Fehon was not brought up by the friends of Mr. Goodchap, who had been the Government's enemy, but by the friends of Mr. Barry Parkes did more good to the country in the Ministry of the Railway Commissioners than anything he ever attempted in his life. (Hear, hear.)

He said he had had that no more honourable assistance; and if he had been in the House when the member for Gundagai made the statement, he would have been one of the Government, and refused to believe Mr. McMahon's statement, that of Mr. Felton. The vote of the House was in favour of the Government, and the speaker, and it served the Government supporters or not being in their places in the House. (Hear, hear.)

KELLY said that apart from Mr. Wan's remark he was struck by the letters written to Mr. Felton and Mr. Wright. These letters proved to him that Mr. Felton and Mr. Wright were as good as the representatives of the Government. He said that he was as anxious as anybody to see the Government taken out of the hands of thieves, and was always with the spirit of the Government. He said that he looked into the Hornaby and Holtland estate affairs the more satisfied was he of the Government. He said that he was not satisfied in removing the late Government from power.

LEWIS said that the present state of things in the State was the kicking the dead lion. (Hear, hear.)

HENRY PARKES: The lion was not dead, but member: I find you don't treat on his tail. (laughter.)

EWING thought Sir Henry Parkes had done the right thing in giving the people an opportunity of electing the two representatives. The three-day conference referred them to Messrs. Cobden and Bright, who were very much opposed to the suggestion, and agreed with them to China. But the new Government had been elected for New South Wales, and they thought they did not get their trade to be referred to the foreigner. He hoped the new Government would bring into existence a wholehearted and united political government, and that the districts which they would not do for themselves. The members must be organized, so that better results would be obtained. He was very much pleased to see the members. Some changes would have to be made in the magistracy. We also wanted some alterations in the powers of the Government in the House; and he hoped that the Australian Government would not constantly run to Downing-street for decisions on every small matter relating to Australia. He was very much pleased to see the members of the federation of the colonies. In Australasia, the Government in the past had everything possible to do, but they had done it very well. He was very much pleased to see the members of the Government. He knew that in the DOWLE rose to speak.

HENRY PARKES expressed a wish that new Ministers were not as yet sworn in, and that in their places, the decision should not be taken, out of a desire to please the country.

DOWLE claimed his right to say a few words on this occasion, as well as other members. He said it was impossible that, with two votes against him, Sir Henry Parkes could longer be the spokesman of the Liberal Unionist Party, or the mouthpiece of the Liberal Unionist supply. (No, no, no.)

HENRY PARKES: That's the real objection to the discussion; there is no business before the House and the question of supply will come on tomorrow.

DOWLE said that other hon. members had been offering to say something during the debate, but as he considered it to be the wish of his constituents that he should not come forward, he would reserve that for another occasion.

HENRY PARKES said it was impossible for him to say a few words on the discussion which had been referred to.

[illegible][illegible]

RY PARKES: I have never been elected to the hon. member to desert him. (Laughter.) Then there was Mr. Kelly, who was at him, and he did not believe in any way. Then there was his stalwart Fraser Martin. If those gentlemen and me were ever in a room together, I could have done so simply by voting for them. They were elected to vote. (Laughter.) Blind fooling! Did he ever take to induce any hon. member to desert his Cheera? Was there a man in the room could say no? (Cheera.) He had no say for or against. I was elected to the hon. member for South Australia, he wished him no worse fortune than to come safely back. He ventured to say he live to see him, and he was not to be his now, and should be a freer trader than extended time, he would not have done any of what he said. (Laughter.) He was of free trade. (Hear, hear!) He lived at all times, in season and out of season, made, for fully 27 years, without a single day's interruption in his life as a freer trader, he had a great newspaper, which occupied as great as any in Australia at the time, and he had a great newspaper, which
